Montag, 15. Juni 2020 Introducing Antrow, a German Software Development company that offers MS-Access to Web App conversion Services

Antrow is a German Software Development company that offers MS-Access to Web App conversion Services for companies looking to secure their database over the cloud.

Microsoft Access is one of the best-known database applications and is still widely used by businesses large and small. However, the powerful and versatile programme was clipped in its wings by Microsoft when they withdrew support for Access Web Apps, among other limitations such as limited access to the database, difficult user and permission management, performance problems on large databases, etc.

This has prompted many companies looking for 24/7 data access from anywhere on any device to move from MS Access to web applications.

Antrow has over 15 years of experience in migrating MS-Access database to fully functional online web app Application.

The company is proud to have helped over 500 customers to bring their MS-Access databases to the web.

Speaking about their services, a company executive said: "With our own developed .Net MS-Access framework we ensure a cost-effective 1 to 1 migration so all your forms, data and reports are available for you in your Web browser with the same functionality as on your local PC.

Your converted application can be run on any ISP such as Azure, Amazon AWS or google web service or in your own Cloud.

The company's web applications were developed with maximum encryption and security, as well on Microsoft latest technologies and can be scaled upwards without any extra coding. These programs support various languages, thanks to its built-in language control centre that each customer can maintain and update.

Antrow's services have elicited rave reviews from its clients.

According to a client, Elias Noah: " My company's workforce expanded, and with the Covid-19 work from home order, we needed a way to give everyone virtual access to the database. I contacted Antrow and all my staff have been happy with their services. I give them the full marks for a job well done.
